PREFACE

It is sixty years since a History of the Speculative Society was published, and it has for a long time been felt that it would be of interest, not only to members, but to many who are not members, if that History were brought down to date.

In 1864 the Society celebrated its centenary, and six years later a committee was appointed to consider the matter. In 1871 that committee reported that no new publication should then be undertaken, but that arrangements might be made to collect information to be used when the proper time should come. The practical outcome of this suggestion was the institution of the elaborate system of roll-books, minute-books, and report-books which is now in use, and which preserves a permanent record of all information of general interest concerning each member of the Society. For this system of records, which has furnished valuable material in compiling the present volume, the Society is mainly indebted to the secretary of that date, Mr. Charles J. Guthrie.

In 1892 a new edition of the Society's History was again projected, but although a committee was appointed to undertake the work, there is no record of anything having been done.

Nine years later the Society again took the matter up, and the work of the committee which was then appointed is now given in the present volume.

At first it was thought possible that the new History might be treated as a continuation of the former work of 1845, but in consideration of the scarcity of that book, it was determined that the new volume should be complete in itself, and should chronicle the membership of the Society from its beginning. It has, however, been thought unnecessary to treat with the same fulness the record of members whose careers were exhaustively dealt with in the former History, and it was also deemed expedient to depart in certain particulars from the scheme of that volume. Thus, in the present History, records of the debates or of the essays read by members of the Society have not been included.

The article on the History of the Society, with which the volume begins, is from the pen of Mr. W. K. Dickson, and the Committee desire to record their indebtedness to him, and to express their cordial thanks for the time and labour which he has devoted to the work.

They have also to thank a large number of friends who have rendered assistance in obtaining and checking information for the Lists of Members.

The Committee have further to acknowledge gratefully the valuable assistance afforded by Mr. J. L. Caw, curator of the Scottish National Portrait Gallery, in tracing and selecting portraits for reproduction ; as well as the courtesy of Sir J. G. T. Sinclair, Captain John Hope, R.N., Dr. W. H. Miller, Mr. Charles J. Guthrie, Mr. Andrew Elliot, and the Society of Writers to the Signet in granting leave to reproduce portraits in their possession. To Mr. Augustus Saint Gaudens they are indebted for permission to include a plate of his memorial of Robert Louis Stevenson, and they would also thank Messrs. T. C. and E. C. Jack, who kindly lent the photo-gravure plates of the portraits of Sir H. Moncreiff Wellwood, Lord Jeffrey, and Professor Dugald Stewart which are reprinted here.

It is interesting to note that every one of the judges of the Second Division of the Court of Session in 1812, an etching of which by John Kay is reproduced at page 104, had been a member of the Speculative Society.

In name of the Committee,

WM. WATSON,
Convener.

THE SPECULATIVE SOCIETY

CHAPTER I

THE SOCIETY IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

‘O, I do think the Spec. is about the best thing in Edinburgh.’ So Robert Louis Stevenson wrote to a fellow-member in 1873; and in Memories and Portraits he has left us an admirable description of the Society. ‘The Speculative Society,’ he says, ‘is a body of some antiquity, and has counted among its members Scott, Brougham, Jeffrey, Horner, Benjamin Constant, and many a legal and local celebrity besides. By an accident, variously explained, it has its rooms in the very buildings of the University of Edinburgh: a hall, Turkey-carpeted, hung with pictures, looking, when lighted up at night with fire and candle, like some goodly dining-room; a passage-like library, walled with books in their wire cages; and a corridor with a fireplace, benches, a table, many prints of famous members, and a mural tablet to the virtues of a former secretary. Here a member can warm himself and loaf and read; here, in defiance of Senatus-consults, he can smoke.’ The paragraph is like a little Dutch picture; it focuses in vivid colour the associations which rise in the memory at the name of the Spec.,—the stately old room, aglow with many candles, the books, the portraits, the pious commemoration of the dead—‘famous men and our fathers that begat us.’

The Society’s records now extend unbroken over a hundred and forty years. It was founded in the notable year 1764, when Watt was finishing his experiments on the steam-engine and George Grenville was beginning to tax the North American Colonies. On the evening of Saturday, the 17th of November in that year, half a dozen Edinburgh students met for the purpose of taking steps to found a society 'for improvement in Literary Composition and Public Speaking.' They were William Creech, afterwards Burns's publisher and Lord Provost of Edinburgh; Allan Maconochie, who became the first Lord Meadowbank; Alexander Belsches of Invermay; John Bruce, afterwards Professor of Logic at Edinburgh; John Bonar, afterwards Solicitor of Excise; and John Mackenzie of Dolphinton. Their first recorded act was as follows: 'Mr. Creech chose President.' They then proceeded to appoint a committee to frame laws for the proposed new society. The first ordinary meeting took place on the following Friday, the 23rd of the month, when Creech read a discourse on 'The Advantages of Society in General and of Literary Institutions in Particular,' the laws as drafted by the committee were approved, and the Speculative Society was founded. Creech was the moving spirit of the enterprise; his name stands at the head of our roll; and it is to him that we may look back as Fundator Noster.

He was a man of excellent business capacity—as Burns says of him, 'he had o' things an unco slight'—and there can be little doubt that it is chiefly to him that we owe the original draft of the Society's laws. There is nothing in the Society's history more striking than the fact that all its characteristic features, which have stood the test of time so well, date from the first years of its existence. The weekly meetings, the limited membership, admission by ballot, compulsory duty, and the rigid exclusion of strangers, were all established from the beginning. We are so accustomed to the easy working of these institutions, and they have been so widely adopted in the constitution of similar societies here and elsewhere, that we are apt to regard them as laws of Nature, and to overlook the amount of thought and sound discretion which went to their framing.

The laws appear to have been at first re-enacted annually; they are engrossed afresh at the beginning of each year's minutes and subscribed by all the members for the time being. Some clauses there are which read curiously nowadays; for example, it is enacted 'That any person who shall interrupt another, either while speaking, debating, or reading, by laughing, or by any other improper behaviour, shall be solemnly reprimanded by the President'; further, 'That no person of immoral character can be admitted, whatever his abilities in other respects may be; and that every Member who is heard swear, or use unbecoming Language in the Society, shall for the first fault be fined in 6d., for the second in 1s., and the third time shall be extruded.' These penalties were in 1767 increased to 2s. 6d. and 5s. respectively. Both these laws have long since disappeared from our statute-book; but their spirit passed into our common law.

The original limit of membership was twenty. In 1769 it was raised to twenty-five. At first the Society met on Friday evenings at six o'clock. The evening of meeting was altered to Tuesday in 1770. In 1791 the hour was altered to seven.

The fines and dues in those days were moderate. The original entry-money was only 1s. 6d. The annual subscription was 2s. 6d. The fine for absence from a meeting was 6d., which, if an excuse were sent, was reduced to 3d. If the absent member had been appointed to any duty, he was fined 1s., but if he gave intimation of his intended absence, he was only fined in the penalty for such absence. Members arriving ten minutes late were fined 1d., half an hour late, 2d., 'unless for a proper reason condescended on and dispensed with by the President.' After the Society was fairly on its legs the fines soon mounted up to the more formidable penalties with which we are now acquainted. At first a system prevailed by which a fresh ballot was taken at the beginning of each session, so that unpopular or ineffective members could be ejected; thus we find that on October 25, 1765, 'Mr. Baillie (in absence) and Mr. Scott (in absence) were by a great majority dismissed.' This soon gave place to fixity of tenure.

The Society was soon in working order, and proceeded to grapple with serious subjects. We find them at their fourth meeting debating 'Whether does a married or a single state tend most to promote Virtue?' and before long they are discussing such a thorny question as 'Whether is that Modesty which is characteristic of the fair Sex natural to them or acquired by Education?' The business of the Society then as now consisted chiefly of essays and debates. Two features which existed at first were soon discontinued—readings from English authors, and 'inquiries,' that is to say, questions which did not put a definite yea-or-nay issue before the meeting—for example, 'What is the best duration of Parliaments?' On January 4, 1765, a motion was made that 'as an additional Entertainment to the Society any Member who has anything new or curious to communicate be allowed to do so, and the same being agreed to it was ordered that it be observed in future,' a practice which has also vanished.

All the original members seem to have worked well, and matters seem to have gone very smoothly. Cases of discipline did occasionally occur; for example, we find the following entry in the minutes of December 3, 1766: 'Complaint having been made by the President, at an Extraordinary Meeting, against Mr. George Muat, a Member of this Society, who came into their presence upon the Wednesday preceding intoxicated with Liquor, it was unanimously Ordered that a Letter should be sent him commanding his Attendance to answer for his Conduct, and informing him unless he did so that his Absence would be assumed a Defence of his Crimes. In consequence whereof Mr. Muat having appeared at next Meeting, was asked by the President, in name of the Society, If he was sorry for the Offence he had thereby given to the Society, and determined to be more cautious in his Conduct for the time to come: To which he refused making any satisfactory Reply, but on the contrary loaded the Members with unmannerly Abuse: The Society however, observing him inflamed with Passion, and thereby incapacitated from speaking with Coolness, Ordered that an explicit Answer might be made in writing at next Meeting. And a Letter having been this Evening read, Which in place of satisfactory Reply contained only scurrilous Invective in the form of a Demission, The Society unanimously refuse the same, and order his Extrusion, of which the Secretary is appointed to inform him.' So Mr. Muat disappears ingloriously, nor does it appear that he afterwards came to any good.

Creech did a great deal of work for the Society. He was made an honorary member in 1769. He died in 1815. Raeburn painted him in 1806, and has left us the likeness of a prosperous citizen, with a rosy and smiling countenance, trim, well-powdered side-curls, voluminous white cravat, and the neatest of silver-buckled breeches and black silk stockings, encasing most shapely limbs—a comely presence.

Among the members who attended the Society during its first period were Charles Hay, Lord Newton, whose face is familiar to us in Raeburn's picture in the National Gallery, 'just awakened from clandestine slumber on the bench'; Lord Woodhouselee; Lord Hermand, so inimitably sketched by Cockburn ('Commonplace toppers think drinking a pleasure; but with Hermand it was a virtue'); Dr. James Gregory, who gave us Gregory's Mixture; and Sir Henry Moncreiff primus.

The Society's first hall was built in 1769. Permission was obtained from the Town Council, then patrons of the University, to erect it on a vacant part of the College area, the College Committee having reported that the proposed building would not injure the College 'but rather beautify the same.' The new hall was 25 feet long by 19 feet wide. It is described in the minutes as having a 'Coach Roof' and arched windows. The President's chair and table stood on a raised platform at the west end; at the east end was a desk for 'the Gentleman that gives the Discourse'; a bench covered with green baize ran round the room. The building cost £164; it was paid for partly out of the Society's funds, partly by subscription among the members. In 1775 a lobby was added.

From 1774 to 1780 the Society passed through a period of depression. The numbers fell off, and in 1777 a committee was appointed to consider how it might best be restored to its former flourishing state,—a familiar symptom of ill-health. Even during this period, however, the Society showed abundant signs of life; it voted a hundred guineas to the fund for raising the Edinburgh corps of volunteers, and among its new members were

WILLIAM CREECH

PAINTER BY SIR HENRY RAEBURN R.A.

Dugald Stewart, David Hume, afterwards Baron of Exchequer and author of Hume on Crimes, and John Clerk of Eldin.

In 1779 the entry-money for the session was dispensed with. In the following year there was a large accession of members, and the maximum number of ordinary members was raised to thirty, the figure at which it has ever since remained.

During this period the most active and conspicuous member was Sir James Mackintosh. Twenty years later he wrote of his connection with the Society :—

‘I was soon admitted a member of the Speculative Society, which had general literature and science for its objects. It had been founded about twenty years before; and during that time numbered among its members all the distinguished youth of Scotland, as well as many foreigners attracted to Edinburgh by its medical school.

‘When I became a member, the leaders were Charles Hope, now Lord Justice-Clerk; John Wylde, afterwards Professor of Civil Law, and who has now, alas! survived his own fertile and richly endowed mind; Malcolm Laing the historian—“the scourge of impostors, the terror of quacks”; Baron Constant de Rebecque, a Swiss of singular manners and powerful talents, and who made a transient appearance in the tempestuous atmosphere of the French Revolution; Adam Gillies, a brother of the historian, and a lawyer in great practice at Edinburgh; Lewis Grant, eldest son of Sir James Grant, then a youth of great promise, afterwards member of Parliament for the county of Elgin; and Thomas Addis Emmet, who soon after quitted physic for law, and became distinguished at the Irish bar. . . . Upon the whole they were a combination of young men more distinguished than are usually found in one university at the same time; and the subsequent fortune of some of them, almost as singular as their talents, is a curious specimen of the revolutionary times in which I have lived. When I was in Scotland in 1801, Constant was a Tribune in France, Charles Hope, Lord Advocate, and Emmet, his former companion, a prisoner under his control!’

In 1783 Emmet, on behalf of the Historical Society of Trinity College, Dublin, proposed that a member of either Society should, on producing proper certificate of membership, be permitted to attend the meetings of the other. The proposal was agreed to, and during the following twenty years members of the Historical Society occasionally presented their certificates, and spoke and voted, and even read papers, at the meetings of the Speculative. The relation was dissolved in 1806. It was renewed in 1863 and still exists.

The termination of Emmet’s own connection with the Society may be noted here. On November 20, 1798, ‘The Secretary (Mr. Waugh) moved, and was seconded by Mr. Henry Brougham, That as Thomas Addis Emmet has acknowledged himself a Member of the Executive Directory of the Irish Union, and has confessed himself privy to carrying on a treasonable correspondence with France, his name should be erased from the List of the Speculative Society. A ballot was taken on this motion, after it had lain on the table for three weeks, and it was carried unanimously.’

In 1784 it was resolved that attendance for three Sessions and the reading of three Essays should qualify for extraordinary privileges. In the same year the Library was started, on the initiative of Basil Lord Daer—Burns’s Lord Daer. In 1786 the entrance-money was raised to a guinea and a half. A more important innovation was a resolution carried in 1783, that 'when the debate is ended, the sense of the Society be taken by a division, the result to be inserted in the minutes.'

The fat years were again followed by the lean years. From 1789 to 1796 was a period of decline; few new members joined, and meetings often failed for want of a quorum. But the scanty membership did not lack quality. Walter Scott was admitted on December 21, 1790, and Francis Jeffrey on December 11, 1792.

Scott was Secretary from 1791 to 1795. Lockhart's list of his essays and speeches may serve as a specimen of the work done in the Society at the time. 'Scott's essays were, for November 1791, On the Origin of the Feudal System; for the 14th February 1792, On the Authenticity of Ossian's Poems; and on the 11th December of the same year he read one On the Origin of the Scandinavian Mythology. The selection of these subjects shows the course of his private studies and predilections; but he appears, from the minutes, to have taken a fair share in the ordinary debates of the Society,—and spoke in the spring of 1791 on these questions, which all belong to the established text-book for juvenile speculation in Edinburgh:—"Ought any permanent support to be provided for the poor?" "Ought there to be an established religion?" "Is attainder and corruption of blood ever a proper punishment?" "Ought the public expenses to be defrayed by levying the amount directly upon the people, or is it expedient to contract national debt for that purpose?" "Was the execution of Charles I. justifiable?" "Should the slave-trade be abolished?" In the next session, previous to his call to the bar, he spoke in the debates of which these were the theses:—"Has the belief in a future state been of advantage to mankind, or is it ever likely to be so?" "Is it for the interest of Britain to maintain what is called the balance of Europe?" and again on the eternal question as to the fate of King Charles I., which, by the way, was thus set up for re-discussion on a motion by Walter Scott.

'He took,' continues Lockhart, 'for several winters, an ardent interest in this society. Very soon after his admission (18th January 1791) he was elected their librarian; and in the November following, he became also their secretary and treasurer; all which appointments indicate the reliance placed on his careful habits of business, the fruit of his chamber education. The minutes kept in his handwriting attest the strict regularity of his attention to the small affairs, literary and financial, of the club; but they show also, as do all his early letters, a strange carelessness in spelling. His constant good temper softened the asperities of debate; while his multifarious lore, and the quaint humour with which he enlivened its display, made him more a favourite as a speaker than some whose powers of rhetoric were far above his.

'Lord Jeffrey remembers being struck, the first night he spent at the Speculative, with the singular appearance of the secretary, who sat gravely at the bottom of the table in a huge woollen night-cap; and when the president took the chair, pleaded a bad toothache as his apology for coming into that worshipful assembly in such a "portentous machine." He read that night an essay on ballads, which so much interested the new member that he requested to be introduced to him. Mr. Jeffrey called on him next evening, and found him "in a small den, on the sunk floor of his father's house in George's Square, surrounded with dingy books," from which they adjourned to a tavern and supped together. Such was the commencement of an acquaintance, which by degrees ripened into friendship, between the two most distinguished men of letters whom Edinburgh produced in their time.'

Another prosperous time began in 1797. From 1797 to 1805 is perhaps the most brilliant period in the Society's history. The membership was full, and included Lord Henry Petty, afterwards third Marquess of Lansdowne, who became Chancellor of the Exchequer at five-and-twenty, Henry Brougham, Francis Horner, John Archibald Murray, Charles Kinnaid, James Moncreiff, and Henry Cockburn.

The use of the Society's rooms by members during the day dates from 1797.

The Society, like everything else in the country, was affected by the white heat of political passion generated by the French Revolution. Cockburn has given us a picture of Edinburgh in the days when Henry Dundas was at the zenith of his power and Braxfield was Lord Justice-Clerk. Everything had a political colour. In 1798 some essays read in the Speculative were regarded as irreligious in tendency, and a resolution was passed forbidding for the future any attacks on Christianity. Its terms are delightfully characteristic of the time. On May 1, 1798, 'Mr. Forbes moved, and was seconded by Mr. Mackenzie, a Resolution, the purport of which was to express that, in consequence of certain essays lately delivered, the Society disapproves the introduction in future of any attacks on the Christian Religion, and considers such sentiments as too much connected with revolutionary principles.'

In 1799 political feeling brought about a serious crisis. The explosion was caused by Alexander Maconochie, afterwards the second Lord Meadowbank ('Lord Meadowbank also'), who on January 22, 1799 was reported to the Society as having said, 'though advised by Mr. Fullarton to refrain from such words as they might lead him into a Scrape': 'In future I shall sit in the Society not only as a Member but as a Spy upon the conduct of the Society for the University.'

'Mr. Maconochie,' says the minute-book, 'being called upon from the Chair to answer to the charges of having used such expressions, made the following declaration, which was taken down by the Secretary, viz.:—That in conversation with Mr. Fullarton he mentioned to him that he intended to be a Spy on, i.e. to take down the words of this night's debate, if they interfered with questions of modern politics, in order that he might summon a general meeting of the Society, for the purpose of considering the propriety of resigning the privileges of the Society into the hands of the University, as such discussions being permitted were likely to produce within the walls of the University a political Society, perhaps a Jacobin Club.'

Brougham was instantly on his legs, and moved a resolution, which, after setting forth Maconochie's misdeeds, declared 'that Mr. Maconochie has been guilty of an high Insult to the honour of the Society, and has avowed the assumption of an office utterly inconsistent with the character of a Member of this Society.' After a long and fierce debate the motion was carried.

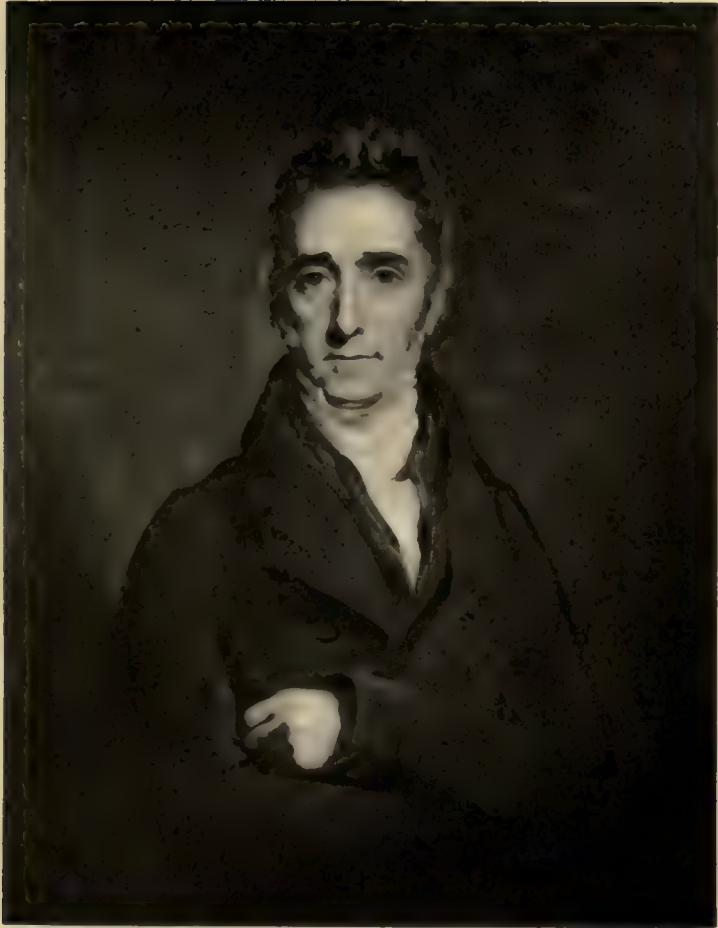

A terrible storm followed. Many senior members took fright at the idea of being connected with so dangerous a body, and a shower of resignations came in. Ultimately a joint committee of the Town Council and the Senatus Academicus exculpated the Society from all blame. A resolution of 1794, prohibiting political debates, which had been rescinded in 1799, was restored. A lengthy address, framed by Jeffrey and Horner, was issued by the Society to its honorary and extraordinary members, narrating the whole story. It is printed in full in the History of 1845. Here is Cockburn's account of the affair. 'The Society,' he writes, 'had never been in such glory as during the immediately preceding years. I forget the exact origin of the disputes that had convulsed it; but they all grew out of the proceedings connected with the expulsion of Mr. Emmet—then implicated in the Irish rebellion, and afterwards leading counsel at New York—an able and excellent man, and with a proposal for dissolving some literary connection which had long subsisted between the Speculative and a similar society in Dublin. This (as was secretly intended) introduced the whole politics of the day. The agitation brought back the old members, who, headed by Charles Hope and David Hume, of course tried to bear down the younger, who, led by Brougham, Jeffrey, Horner, Lord Henry Petty, and Lord Kinnaird, were as defying in their Whiggism as their opponents in their Toryism. This contest produced animated debates and proceedings, which did not occupy the Society alone, but the whole College, and indeed all Edinburgh, for nearly an entire session. Hume being supposed to have applied some offensive imputation to the junior party, it was arranged (by lot, I believe) that Jeffrey should require an explanation. This was given; but still they were bound over to keep the peace. At last the seniors were defeated, and some of them made the victory clearer by resigning.'

Cockburn's further recollections of the Society may conclude this chapter. 'No better arena could possibly have been provided for the exercise of the remarkable young men it excited. In a few years after this Petty was Chancellor of the Exchequer. He had left the Society before I joined it; but Kinnaird, an able man and an excellent speaker, continued to attend occasionally; and Brougham, Horner, Jeffrey, James Moncreiff, and other powerful persons, attended regularly, and took an active part in the business, throughout all the three years during which I was an ordinary member. The only defect was, that the recent discussions turned away many of the good Tory youths, and that the usual audience was not large enough for such speakers. However, there were some of them on whom this had little effect. Brougham in particular, whose constitutional keenness made him scent the future quarry, gave his whole soul to this preparatory scene, and often astonished us by the vigour with which, even to half a dozen of lads, he could abandon himself to his subject, and blaze as if he had been declaiming against Cicero in the Forum. Moncreiff has improved very greatly since then; but Jeffrey, Horner, and Brougham were as good writers and speakers then as they have ever been since, and each in the very same style he afterwards retained. Of all those who attempted to speak, I was then decidedly the worst and the most unpromising, worse perhaps than even Charles and Robert Grant, both of whom have since risen to high station in Parliament and in public life. In so far as I was personally concerned, however, the Speculative completed what the Academical had begun; and together they did me more good than all the rest of my education. And I must attest that their moral benefits were fully more important than their intellectual. They inspired a high tone of virtue.'

CHAPTER II

1800 TO 1845

As one reads the minutes of the Speculative, through decade after decade, one is reminded of that clock of the Bastille, which, all through the day on which the fortress was stormed, ticked on quietly, in its inner court, 'at its ease, hour after hour, as if nothing special for it or the world were passing.' A century of the history of Europe is unrolled — Trafalgar, Austerlitz, Waterloo; Catholic Emancipation, Reform, Free Trade; Solferino, Sadowa, Sedan; empires rise, prosper, and collapse; the map changes like a kaleidoscope—and the Speculative meets regularly every Tuesday night and finds it all very interesting material for debates. To take an example, among the questions in the case-book for Session 1814-15 was, 'Is the present Government of France likely to prove permanent?' The Government in question was that of Louis XVIII., just come to his own. Before the question came to be debated, on March 28, 1815, Napoleon had escaped from Elba, Louis le Desiré had fled to Lille, and the Hundred Days had begun. It is serenely noted that the question 'was, in consequence of the recent change in the Government of France, agreed by the Society to be discussed in reference to the Government of Bonaparte.' It was wisely decided in the negative, and Waterloo came in due course.

From 1805 to 1815 the Society continued to flourish.

Among its members during this period were Lord John Russell, John Wilson ('Christopher North'), Sir William Hamilton, Andrew Rutherford, Thomas Maitland, Duncan M'Neill (afterwards Lord Colonsay and Lord Justice-General), John Gibson Lockhart, and Thomas Erskine of Linlathen.

The long war, which closed the Continent and made the grand tour impossible, brought to Edinburgh a number of young Englishmen of fortune, of whom several joined the Speculative. Among them was John Spencer Stanhope, afterwards of Cannon Hall, Yorkshire, well known as an archæologist. Some notes as to the doings of this set are given in his letters, which have been printed in the recently published Memoirs of his daughter Mrs. Pickering. One of these—undated, but apparently written in the winter of 1807, gives us a glimpse of a notable enterprise. 'The debates in the Spec.,' he writes, 'begin to flag; but the most extraordinary of all is that the Oxford men, i.e. Price, Carew, Desart, Ackland, Huet, Fazakerley, and Hartopp, have actually determined upon so mad a scheme as that of giving a ball. The Dutchess [of Gordon], who is really come back, has sett her face against it; but it will be now too late to stop it, as it is to take place on Monday week.' How the ball went off is not recorded.

A member whose name ought not to be forgotten was John Waugh, sometime bookseller in Edinburgh, who from 1795 to 1807 was Secretary and Treasurer. The duties of these offices were never better performed. In January 1804, on the proposal of Jeffrey and Brougham, Waugh was presented with a silver cup in recognition of his services. He continued to act as Treasurer till 1835, his active connection with the Society thus extending over forty years. He died in 1852.

In 1814 the jubilee of the Society was celebrated by a dinner of some eighty members, held on December 17 in Fortune's Tontine Tavern, Princes Street. Principal Baird was in the chair, and Dr. James Gregory acted as croupier. Among those present was Professor John Bruce, one of the founders of the Society; of the others Creech and Allan Maconochie alone survived. 'After the Principal withdrew,' says the old History, 'Walter Scott was called to the chair, which did not impair the hilarity of a useful and interesting evening. He concluded the proceedings by an appropriate toast, "May the next half-century give as much pleasure to the new members, as the last has done to the old."'

Francis Horner died in 1817—'a man fortunate in his friends, his opportunities, above all his character. . . . He had not the quality of greatness, but affection followed him and he commanded esteem. His was the very genius of moderation, and to recall him is to come face to face with the perfect Whig. In life exemplary, honourable in practice and in aim, he died after a career that had been serviceable as well as distinguished, still young enough to inspire the belief that his measure had not been given, and that what he had done was but an earnest of that he might one day do.' He was regarded with extraordinary reverence by his contemporaries in the Speculative.¹ A general meeting was held, at which it was resolved that his portrait should be placed in the Hall. The result was the acquisition of the beautiful Raeburn which now hangs in the

Society's rooms. It is a replica of a picture in the National Portrait Gallery, and bears this tribute by Jeffrey: 'First the ornament of this institution, and then of his country.' It was reproduced in the volume of selected portraits by Raeburn edited in 1890 by Mr. W. E. Henley, whose words have just been quoted.

The Society's old Hall was taken down in 1817, to make room for the new College buildings; and in accordance with the understanding on which the Town Council's original grant of a site in 1769 had been made, accommodation, consisting of a debating-hall, library, and lobby, was provided for the Society in the new buildings. The new rooms were designed by William Henry Playfair, who took a warm interest in furthering the Society's objects. For a couple of sessions, until the new buildings were finished, the Society met in the old Divinity Hall. The first meeting in the present Hall was held on January 19, 1819. There was a great gathering of old members. Principal Baird delivered an address, and old Professor Bruce, now the sole survivor of the founders, was present and spoke.

The furnishing of the new rooms cost £270. The entrance-money, which had been gradually rising, now reached its maximum, five guineas.

It is to this period that Lockhart's caricature of the Society in Peter's Letters to his Kinsfolk refers. The Letters were published in 1819. Lockhart was still young and sour, writing savagely in Blackwood, and earning his nickname of 'The Scorpion'; he was to travel far and learn much before writing the Life of Scott. His description of the Society is a wicked libel, but it is an old story now, and it must not be omitted here.

Dr. Peter Morris has heard much of the Society and conceives a desire to be present at a meeting. He learns, however, that this cannot be unless he becomes a member. 'These sages will scarcely allow a poor passing stranger to catch even one sidelong odour of their wisdom. No—it is necessary to assume the regular garb of the initiated, before these Hierophants will expand the gates of their Adytum, and reveal to you the inspiring glories of their mysteries. Although I could not help feeling some qualmish suspicions, that this arrangement might, in part at least, have been dictated by a due reverence for the old maxim, omne ignotum pro magnifico, yet the way in which I heard the Society spoken of, by persons for whose opinion I could not but entertain a high respect, and the curiosity which I certainly felt, to witness for myself all possible manifestation of the rising genius of Scotland, were enough to counter-balance any little scruples I might have, and I resolved, since less might not avail, to affix the name of Peter Morris, M.D., to the regular formula of supplication.' The Doctor is admitted in due course. (I am told that in modern times his name has been hunted for in the Society's minutes. It may be well to explain that he was of the kindred of Mrs. Harris and of Mr. Brooks of Sheffield.) On the night of his introduction a festive dinner takes place at the Lord Nelson tavern, Barclay's, close to the University. 'To me,' says the Doctor, 'the greatest luxury was some very fine draught porter, the first I have met with since I came to Scotland, for the people of this place in general drink all their malt-liquor bottled—but the landlord of the Nelson is an Englishman and knows better. After finishing a bottle of Madeira, we had some very fair Port, which we chose to drink mulled, being assured that Mrs. Barclay piques herself upon her scientific use of spices in that kind of preparation. The skill of our hostess gave us entire satisfaction, and we kept her at work pretty closely till seven o'clock.' Then the Doctor and his friends adjourn to the Speculative. He proceeds:—

'The Speculative Society is the only institution of the kind, whose existence is acknowledged in a formal manner by the University. It forms a part of the system, and, as such, is provided with chambers within the College—advantages which are, no doubt, owing to the high reputation the Society has at particular times enjoyed. At the present time, as it happens, the alterations and improvements which are going on within the University buildings have dislodged the Society from their old chambers, and the new and more splendid accommodations designed for them are not quite in readiness for their reception. Their temporary place of meeting is in the hall of the Theological Professor—a low-roofed, dark, mean-looking place, surrounded with shelves groaning under Dutch and Puritanical Divinity; and here it was that I had the honour of being introduced to them.

'Right opposite to the door at which we entered, in a huge elbow-chair, or rather pulpit—from which the Professor of Divinity is, no doubt, accustomed to expound the mysteries of Calvinism,—and, with an air of grave dignity, which any professor might be happy to equal, sate a pale snub-nosed young gentleman, with a hammer in his hand, the President (primâ facie) of the Speculative Society. His eyes half-shut, as if to exclude the distracting dazzle of the tallow candles that blazed close before him; his right hand on his hammer, and his left supporting with two of its fingers the weight of meditation lodged within his forehead; his lips compressed with the firmness of conscious authority, and his whole attitude, as it were, instinct with the very spirit of his station, completed a picture, which, I should suppose, might have produced no trifling effect on the nerves of an entrant more juvenile than myself. Even on me, the vultus sedentis tyranni was not entirely lost, and I confess I was glad when I found that I had fairly seated myself in a dark and remote corner of the room, without attracting any of his attention.

‘Immediately under this imposing figure might be described the less awful, but no less important face and figure of the secretary, who was employed at this moment in calling over the names of the members, according to their position in the muster-roll of the Society. Around a green table, at the head of which Mr. Secretary was placed, a few of the more grave and dignified-looking members were accommodated with cane-backed chairs; while, on either side, the humilior caterva occupied some rows of narrow wooden benches, which rise one above another out of the area of the apartment. Altogether there was an appearance of expectation and preparation, both in their arrangement and in their countenances, which could not fail to excite a considerable degree of attention and respect. . . .

‘By and by, the catalogue being finished, and some minor ceremonies duly performed, one of the young gentlemen stepped from his place, and ascending to a small tribune on the left hand of the President, began to read aloud from a ms. which he held in his hand. It is the custom, it seems, that the business of the Society is always opened by an essay from one of the members, and the person, whose turn it was to minister in this way to their edification, had already announced, as the title of his discourse—“A few Considerations on the Policy of the Corn-Bill.” I listened for some minutes to what he said; but soon perceived that the whole of his merits amounted to nothing more than having translated from bad into worse English a treatise on the same subject in the Edinburgh

Review; so I amused myself during the rest of the performance with some hearty sighs, for having so easily been induced to distrust my own inclinations, and quit Mrs. Barclay for the Speculative.

‘After the essayist had brought his labours to a close, the President opened his eyes (which as yet he had never found leisure to do), and began to ask the members if they had any remarks to offer in regard to the performance they had heard. A pause of several minutes ensued—during which the funereal silence of expectation was only disturbed by a few faint hems from those who intended to be most critical on the occasion, and the rustling of the leaves of the ms., which the author was restoring to his pocket, with a look that spoke as plain as look could speak it—Jamque opus exegi! At last, one of the gentlemen I have mentioned stood up in his place and observed, that, “considering it as a very improper thing, that an essay of so much brilliancy should be allowed to pass unnoticed, he could not help rising to express his astonishment at the delay which had just occurred. The essay,” he said, “displayed every quality which could render an essay honourable to its writer, and agreeable to the Society. Its matter was not, indeed, new; but in its arrangement a very extraordinary degree of skill had certainly been exemplified. . . .” And so forth; some amusing parodies of debating-society criticism follow, too long for citation here. In time the Doctor’s patience gives out. ‘At last,’ he says, ‘I fairly lost temper, and seizing my hat, escaped, as best I might, from the Speculative Society of Edinburgh. My companions on each side of me had been asleep for an hour, but my removal awakened them; and, after rubbing their eyes, and looking round them for a moment, they both had the good sense to follow my example.’

‘On looking at my watch, I found it was eleven o’clock, and I could not help reproaching myself a good deal for the time I had been wasting. The transition from this scene of solemn and stupid drivelling, to the warm fire-side of Mrs. Barclay—her broiled haddocks, her scalloped oysters, and her foaming tankards, was one of the most refreshing things I have ever experienced.’

Lockhart ought to have been expelled; but when all is said he is one of our chief glories, and after eighty years we can afford to pardon him.

In 1825 some zealous members started the ‘Summer Speculative Society,’ an experiment which soon came to an end and has not been renewed.

On January 24, 1826, the law prohibiting discussion of the politics of the day was repealed, on the ground that ‘its violation had been for many years systematic and beneficial.’ It had long been a dead letter; in 1824, for example, we find the Society debating a question so acutely contentious as, ‘Were the proceedings against the Queen in 1822 justifiable?’ Since then current politics have been freely discussed; indeed the whole modern political history of the country is reflected in miniature in the Society’s minute-books, sometimes with curious effects of perspective, like the picture in a convex mirror. It has debated every important question of the day, from the taxation of the American Colonies to the fiscal proposals of Mr. Chamberlain, and its debates have maintained an admirable tradition of fairness and friendliness. With the single exception of the crisis of 1799, political differences have never endangered the well-being of the Society or affected the amenities of personal intercourse among its members. It is remarkable that in a Society of so small a membership both political parties should always have been so well represented. We have seen that Scott had for a contemporary Francis Jeffrey; then came Brougham, Horner, and the rest of the brilliant group who in the days of Dundas fought the uphill battle of Scots Whiggery. A little later came the Blackwood men—the young lions of Toryism—Wilson, Lockhart, and afterwards W. E. Aytoun.

It is curious to note how Fate has dealt with the two groups. In their own time, in politics, the triumph of the Whigs was complete. Brougham became Chancellor, Jeffrey Lord Advocate and a judge, Cockburn Solicitor-General and a judge; the old Scots Toryism was beaten all along the line. Politics pass; literature remains; and the whirligig of time brings in his revenges. Of Sir Walter one does not speak; the King is above party. But Lockhart's Life remains the masterpiece in its kind; Tickler and the Shepherd are with us still; we still laugh over The Glenmutchkin Railway; and still (after the reciter has done his worst) the blood stirs to the trumpet-music of The Island of the Scots and The Burial March of Dundee.

Of the Whig writers (we are not here concerned with Macaulay) Cockburn alone survives, and that only as a local historian. The rest are as dead as King Rhampsinitus. The other day the first 140 volumes of the Edinburgh Review were sold at Dowell's for a shilling.

In January 1835 the seventieth anniversary of the Society was celebrated by a dinner, at which Jeffrey presided. His tribute to the Society may be quoted here: 'He might be permitted to say, that all his observation and all his reflection had tended to enhance in his estimation the value of the advantages of such an Institution, and to diminish his fear of any danger or hazards which it might be supposed to produce. The advantages were obvious—hoped it is now safe from innovation for all time coming. It holds sixteen candles. By an ancient custom of the Society one of these candles is left unlighted on Tuesday evenings. This custom has been the subject of learned investigation and of the report of a committee. Space forbids that it should be further dwelt upon here; in any case it is not well that such arcana should be discussed in a work which may be read by the profane. The subject may be commended to such members of the Society as are interested in the evolution of a myth.

In the winter of 1841 the Town Council, which in University matters was then possessed of a meddlesome devil, made an attempt to compel the members of the Society to leave the precincts of the University at midnight. This was resented, not only as an unwarranted assumption of authority, but as an invasion of the Society's undoubted right to the free use of its own rooms. On December 17, 1841, an extraordinary meeting was held. The Speculative had a valuable ally in the enemy's camp in the person of the Lord Provost, Sir James Forrest, who was himself a member, and who took the chair at the meeting. A report was submitted containing a minutely detailed history of the Society's relations with the Town Council and the College Commissioners with regard to its premises. A strong committee was appointed, with powers to deal with the matter. It included the Solicitor-General (Duncan M'Neill), Lord Cockburn, and Andrew Rutherford. Cockburn—then, as ever, the ready champion of youth—threw himself eagerly into the contest. Thanks to his mediation, the question was settled on the common-sense footing that the College gates should be shut at midnight, but that egress should be allowed to members till all hours—any questions of legal right being left undetermined. The Society accorded to Cockburn their cordial thanks for his services. In his reply he writes (February 28, 1842): 'Had I done a hundred times more, I would have done nothing but my duty, and I shall always be proud to perform it on similar calls. I am conscious that I owe everything I have to the Speculative Society, and every ordinary member who makes a right use of it may be assured that he will hereafter be enabled to make the same declaration truly.'

The researches incident to the controversy with the Town Council had greatly stimulated the interest of members in the Society's past. In February 1842 a committee was appointed for the purpose of printing a list of old members. There were at this time three members of the Society who were known from their intimate friendship as 'The Triumvirate'—Thomas Cleghorn, afterwards Sheriff of Argyll; Robert Balfour, who became Edinburgh secretary of the City of Glasgow Insurance Company; and William Macbean, then secretary of the Society. They were all three enthusiastic members of the Speculative, and had all taken an active part in the contest with the Town Council. In their hands the projected list of members expanded into a more ambitious scheme. It was decided to prepare a complete history of the Society on a large scale. Cockburn was keenly interested in the enterprise. He helped the editors with information and advice, suggested methods of research, and himself supplied copious notes as to former members. On May 16, 1842, he writes to Macbean:—

'This work is more important than even its authors are, perhaps, aware of. A history of the Speculative Society is a history of the best talent that has been reared in Scotland during the most valuable eighty years the country has ever seen. It is a history of the subjects which have chiefly engaged the attention of the literary and scientific youths, of statesmen, of parties, and of the public. It discloses the early seeds of the individual eminence, which, after being brought into bud there, is blown, in various walks, over the country. It is the most inspiring picture that the real life of youth can exhibit of the results of mental energy or of mental sloth, when excited or sunk by competition. Such a history, if enriched by accurate dates and facts, and judiciously sprinkled with proper anecdotes, might be a repertory of great, varied, and permanent value. So take time—ample time—and do it well.’

The History was issued in 1845—a quarto volume, containing an account of the Society from its commencement, a list of the subjects debated, and a complete list of members, with very full biographical notes as to their subsequent careers.

The labour of preparing the volume fell on Cleghorn and Balfour. Macbean did not live to see its completion. He died very suddenly in August 1842. It was considered that his services to the Society should receive exceptional recognition, and in 1842 a marble slab was placed on the wall of the lobby, bearing the following inscription :—

to many generations of members. It haunted the imagination of Louis Stevenson with a curious insistence ; he recurs to it time and again in Memories and Portraits ; and one remembers the dedication of Kidnapped to Charles Baxter, with its reference to 'the beloved and inglorious Macbean.' In 1903 it was removed and placed in the library.

CHAPTER III

WHEN Mr. Arthur Pendennis was an undergraduate of Boniface College, Oxbridge, it will be remembered that he was an eminent debating-society orator. His biographer has described 'those essays and speeches, so simple, so pompous, so ludicrously solemn; parodied so artlessly from books, and spoken with smug chubby faces, and such an admirable aping of wisdom and gravity.' The essays read at the Speculative are no doubt more mature than the productions of Pendennis and his friends; but it is no discourtesy to their authors to describe them as juvenilia, and as such the Society has wisely treated them. It is not well that juvenilia should be made permanently accessible to their authors' contemporaries. The proposal that essays should be preserved was made from time to time, but was regularly negatived till 1841, when the experiment was tried, and it was ordered that essays should be deposited with the librarian and bound for preservation. Several volumes of essays of the period are preserved in the library. The regulation, however, led to trouble. In 1849 Mr. Clark (the late Lord Rutherford Clark) apparently under some misapprehension as to his rights, cut out certain of his own essays from the bound volumes and destroyed them. The proceedings which ensued led to the resignation of Mr. Clark and several other members, one of whom was Lord Watson. (Both Clark and Watson were afterwards readmitted.) The practice was discontinued in 1851.

During the fifties there is little to record. All the early Victorian questions were discussed: 'Is the proposed Exhibition of General Industry [1851] likely to be beneficial in its results?' (decided in the affirmative)—'Ought Lord John Russell's proposed measures with regard to the recent appointments of dignitaries in this country by the Pope to be adopted?' (affirmative)—'Ought there to be a return to protective policy?' (negative)—'Is the combination between the Whigs and Peelites likely to prove conducive to the welfare of the country?' (affirmative)—'Was the secession of 1843 justifiable?' (negative)—'Is the Pre-Raphaelite system of painting consistent with the principles of true art?' (negative)—and so on. In 1859 only one member voted on the affirmative side of the question 'Would the opening of a passage for ships through the Isthmus of Suez be beneficial to this country?' In the same year there appears for the first time the patient figure of the Deceased Wife's Sister; the Society favoured her claim by a majority of one.

A noteworthy sign of the times occurs in the minutes of April 10, 1855, when Mr. A. S. Kinnear moved 'That Members of the Society should not be permitted to smoke in the Lobby.' The motion was withdrawn, and the tobacco-parliament by the fire has for nearly half a century been an institution of the Society.

In 1859 the hour of meeting was changed from seven to eight, at which it has since remained.

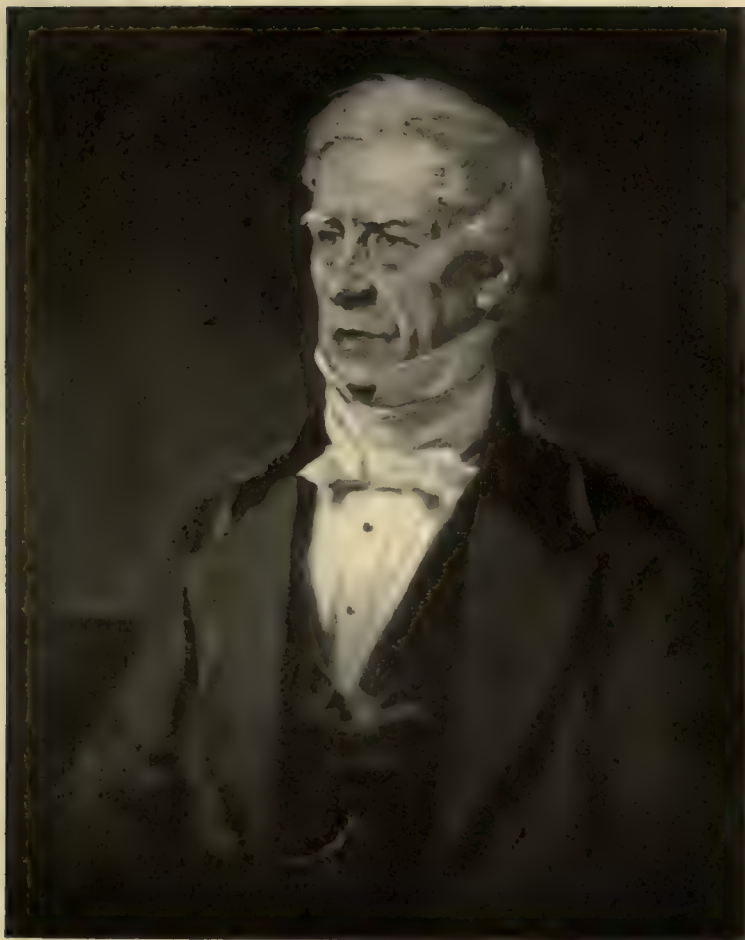

The minutes of November 18, 1862, contain an interesting entry. Lord Brougham had written asking for a copy of the Society's History, which had been forwarded to him. He wrote in reply:—

'14 GRAFTON STREET, 15th November 1862.

'Lord Brougham presents his compliments to Mr. Lawrie and thanks him for his kind note. He has received the volume and feels deeply the great kindness of the Society in letting him have it. He has given it to his friend Mr. Gladstone, for whom it was that he had been desirous of having it. Mr. G. saw Lord B.'s copy at Brougham this autumn, and was so much struck with the evidence which it afforded of correct views on important subjects having been formed so early, that he was most anxious to obtain a copy.'

In 1863 the Society attained its hundredth year, and a committee, consisting of Mr. John Skelton, Sir George Home, Mr. J. H. A. Macdonald, Mr. Alexander Asher, and Sir David Wedderburn, was appointed to arrange for a suitable celebration. The centenary meeting was held on the afternoon of October 14, and in the evening a dinner was held in the Douglas Hotel, St. Andrew Square. Lord Brougham presided. About a hundred members were present, among whom were the Lord Justice-General (Lord Colonsay), the Lord Advocate (Moncreiff), Sir George Clerk, Sir David Brewster, the Rev. Sir Henry Moncreiff, Sir W. Gibson-Craig, Lord Neaves, Lord Ardmillan, Lord Curriehill, and Lord Deas, Mr. Serjeant Shee, the Right Hon. Joseph Napier, Professors Blackie, Lorimer, Muirhead, and Ross, and Messrs. William Watson, G. H. Thoms, J. H. A. Macdonald, J. C. Brodie, Stair Agnew, A. S. Kinnear, W. E. Gloag, and H. J. Moncreiff. A full report of the proceedings was afterwards issued. Many excellent speeches were delivered. Perhaps the most notable was that of Lord Deas. In proposing 'The Memory of the Founders of the Society,' he said:

LORD BROUGHAM.

PAINTED BY MR DANIEL MACNELL, F.R.S.A.

‘This is one of those interesting occasions which can never occur to any of us again. The span of human life is too short to comprehend centuries. Those who celebrate one centenary meeting can never celebrate another; for the gulf which divides us from those who may celebrate the next centenary meeting of this Society is, to us, just as impassable as that which divides us from those who held its first meeting a hundred years ago. A hundred years looks a long period when compared with the usual brevity of human life. And yet how short and swift it really is, you, my Lord, can authoritatively tell, who have lived through more than four-fifths of the period! We can all remember our schoolboy days, when years appeared things of great magnitude; when to have been told this autumn that some favourite wish we had formed would be gratified next autumn would have looked like postponing our enjoyment to another world. And now how short to most of us, even prospectively, appears a year; and retrospectively, what a fleeting shadow! You, my Lord, I dare say, feel, at this moment, as if you could realise and place your hand upon bygone existences of from three to four score years ago; and if you could stretch your hand a little farther back, you would place it on the heads of the Founders of this Society,—six young gentlemen met in solemn conclave concocting its first laws. It is, however, agreeable and consolatory, while life’s brief candle still burns brightly in some of us, and in others of us, perhaps, flickers to its close, to enjoy a few hours of social intercourse with the older Members of this Society, gathered from all the great and important intellectual avocations of this great and growing country; and with the younger Members of this Society, gathered from our academic halls of preparation; and to feel that there is a bond of union amongst us which links us to each other, and to all who have ever been Members of this Society: those who feel as I do, how weakly they fill their places, rejoicing in the intellectual strength and reputation of others of us; and those others rejoicing to impart the lustre of their names and the brilliancy of their fame to those of us who can make no pretensions of our own. It is a common saying that union is strength; but it is, at least, as true, that union is improvement and happiness. . . . The Founders of this Society understood how, by multiplying bonds of union, we multiply the means of improvement and of true enjoyment; sowing, as it were, the seeds of the domestic relations and affections in a new soil, and cultivating them in a more extended field. The Founders of this Society fixed a high standard for the intellectual labourers who were to compete for distinction in that field, and the usual success has followed from the necessity, which all of us in our day and generation, as Ordinary Members of the Society, have felt, for unusual exertion. We owe to this Society that culture and improvement which spring from the contact and conflict of mind with mind; and those of friendships which, although they may be engrafted and grow on the old tree, seldom take such deep and lasting root as when the seeds of them are sown in early life.'

Prince Alfred, the late Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, was at this time attending the University of Edinburgh. Having signified a desire to become a member of the Speculative, he was admitted an ordinary member on November 10, 1863. Prince William of Hesse was admitted at the same time. The two Princes took their seats in the Society on November 17, being introduced by Lord Colonsay. They were both afterwards elected honorary members.

In the Session of 1865-66 trouble arose with the Senatus Academicus. Since 1861 the Senatus had been in the position formerly occupied by the Town Council, of proprietors of the University buildings. Following the policy of their predecessors, they intimated, on November 14, 1865, that they had resolved that the College gates should be shut for the night at 11.30. This raised anew the whole question which had been disputed with the Town Council in 1841. On January 23, 1866, a committee was appointed to prepare and present to the Senatus, and if necessary to the University Court, a memorial on the subject. The committee included Lord Colonsay, the Lord Advocate (Moncreiff), Lord Cowan, Lord Curriehill, Lord Neaves, Lord Ardmillan, Lord Mure, Sir William Gibson-Craig, and other distinguished senior members. Early in the following session a meeting took place between a committee of the Senatus, of which Sir Douglas Maclagan was Convener, and a deputation from the Society. The claims of the Society were stated by Lord Colonsay, the Dean of Faculty (Moncreiff), Lord Deas, and Lord Ardmillan. On December 1 the Senatus, by a majority, agreed to an arrangement similar to that which had been made after the dispute with the Town Council—namely, that the College gates should be shut at the hour ordered, but that members of the Society should have egress up to any hour, the Society paying for the services of a night porter. On February 5, 1867, ‘It was moved by Mr. Macrae and seconded by Mr. Balfour that the thanks of the Society are due to the Committee, and especially to the Right Hon. the Lord President, Lord Deas, and Lord Ardmillan, by whose energy and public spirit the question between the Society and the Senatus has been brought to so satisfactory and amicable a termination—which was carried unanimously.’

Further trouble arose almost immediately. In February 1867 the Senatus claimed from the Society certain payments, including a charge for the use of the Hall. The Secretary allowed the matter to lie over, and on August 1 the Clerk to the Senatus wrote to say that unless the sum claimed by the Senatus was paid by October 15 the Senatus 'would consider the claim of the Society to the use of the rooms to have lapsed.' Nothing further was done during the vacation. On October 12 the Society's new Secretary, Mr. Milroy, wrote to the University Clerk stating that the Society refused to admit any liability to payment for the use of its rooms, and requesting further time to examine the other claims against it, which it was prepared to pay as soon as they were properly ascertained. While these communications were in progress the Senatus, on November 2, summarily announced that as their claim had not been paid 'entrance to the rooms hitherto occupied by the Society would in future be denied to it.' On November 12 the Society was actually locked out by the University janitor, the members assembled at the door lodging a formal protest. After much correspondence and negotiation the Senatus passed the following resolution:—

'The Senatus, having heard the explanations and apology offered by the deputation from the Speculative Society, and the Society's disavowal, through the deputation, of their knowledge of or sympathy with their late Secretary's disregard of the communications of the Senatus and the House Committee, and the Society's assurance through the deputation of its readiness and determination to abide by and fulfil such rules as are considered necessary by the Senatus for the safety and good government of the whole University buildings, resolves to give to the Society access to the rooms occupied by it.' This deliverance was considered at a general meeting of the Society held in Upper Queen Street Hall on November 15, when the following resolution, moved by Lord Deas, was unanimously adopted :—

‘That this meeting, being of opinion that the Resolution which the Senatus Academicus propose to embody in their minutes imports no further acknowledgment of the rights of the Senatus than what was conceded in the memorial presented to them by the Society in 1866, and has no reference to the disputed question of legal right in the Hall, see no objection to acquiesce in the proposed resolution by the Senatus, and authorise the Secretary to transmit a copy of this Resolution to the Secretary of the Senatus accordingly.’ So the matter ended.

On April 23, 1867, an important change was made in the Society’s laws. The entry-money, which had stood at £5, 5s. since 1819, was abolished, and the annual subscription was raised to £2, 2s. The wisdom of the change was soon manifest in an enlarged membership and an increased vitality.

On March 2, 1869, Mr. R. L. Stevenson was admitted as an ordinary member.

Stevenson is the most famous man of letters who has belonged to the Society since Scott. No more interesting personality has ever been of our number, and no one has in the public eye been more closely identified with the Society. His membership calls for more than a passing notice.

In a valedictory address—the original manuscript of which, found at Vailima, was presented by Mr. Charles Baxter to the Society in 1895, and is now one of its most valued possessions—Stevenson has described his first evening in the Speculative. ‘It is about five years ago,’ he writes, ‘since I made my first appearance and my first speech in this hall. It seemed very gloomy, and my fellow-members struck me as aged, formal and impressive. I felt uneasy at their familiarity with each other, and at the curious natural aggregation which kept drawing them together into various little groups and coteries, and left me always excluded and alone. When any one spoke to me, it was more alms-giving than conversation. I felt all the time the loneliness of a boy's first day at school. The interval over, I made a speech in a state of nervous exaltation that we have no language strong enough to describe. A thick, white vapour seemed to fill the room up to the level of my eyes, submerging the secretary, the librarian, and the ruck of other members; but I could see the president towering above on his raised platform, gloomy and awful. After the meeting, the same aggregative principle that had drawn them into groups before, settled my fellow-members into similar groups for the walk homeward, and, as before, left me out. My electricity seemed negative—I had no common interests with the others, no old stories to retell—any remark was a hazardous experiment, and I ended my night by walking home alone, in the blackness of despondency. How I should have laughed any one to scorn who had stopped me then on the Bridges and told me that I should spend in that Society some of the happiest hours of my life, and make friends from among those very members who were now so forbiddingly polite! In the same address he says: 'I had intended, gentlemen, to have left the Society for good at the end of this session, and to have read you a very affecting address upon the strength of my determination; but yet, as I think over all the good times that I have had within these four walls, I am not sorry that you should have postponed my exile and aborted all my unspoken eloquence.' (He refers to his re-election as President.) 'Looking back, as I do now, upon my Speculative past, I feel somewhat in the vein of the man Wordsworth talks about,

Who, when his house is built,
A frame locked up in wood and stone, doth still,
As impotent fancy prompts, by his fireside
Rebuild it to his liking. . . .

Not that I would rebuild it all; only there are some few weak parts in the design—sundry foolish motions, illegal rulings, unrepressed loquacities—that, if I could, I own I should be very glad to cancel. As a whole, however, I look back upon these good times with much regret. I think you will all find it come strangely to you—left-handedly, so to speak—when you have to leave this room for the last time, and shut the door behind you upon three years of happy life. Your retrospect, at least, you will take away with you at your departure; and who can tell how interesting these trivial reminiscences may become hereafter? Jeffrey, you remember, chronicles Scott sitting at that table with a great woollen nightcap drawn snugly over his ears, and apologising in quaint terms for the strange figure that he presented to the worshipful Society. It must have seemed a very slight matter at the time to Jeffrey—ay, and for long after; but when it came out that this Secretary—with the “portentous machine” (as he called it) drawn over his ears—was one of Scotland’s greatest men, his fame cast an interest over this little occurrence, just as it has cast an interest over the ill-written, ill-spelled minutes that we keep preserved in the next room. And who knows, gentlemen, with what Scotts or Jeffreys we may have been sharing this meeting-hall? about what great man we shall have curious anecdotes to tell over dining-tables and write to the biographers in a fine, shaky, octogenarian hand? Nor to us at least shall such apotheosised remembrances be dearest. We shall have many stories, too, of fellow-members who did not come to the surface in after-life, but, it may be, went straightway to the bottom—many “vivas to those who have failed and to those whose war-vessels sank in the sea,” if you will let me once more quote Walt Whitman. We shall know how these unsuccessful men have contributed to our success; and we shall be able to apply the same course of reasoning as regards ourselves to the men who have been yet more successful. Yes, if we should have here some budding Scott, or if the new Shakespeare should here be incubating his fine parts, we shall all, gentlemen, have a hand in the finished article. Some thoughts of ours, or at least some way of thinking, will have taken hold upon his mind; some seasonable repartee, some happy word, will have fallen into the “good soil” of his genius, and will afterwards bring forth an hundredfold. We shall all have had a hand, I repeat, at making that Shakespeare or that Scott.’

No one was ever more profoundly influenced by the Society than Stevenson himself. The time of his ordinary membership was the critical time of his life—the student years when he was ‘known and pointed out for the pattern of an idler,’ and yet ‘was always busy on his own private end, which was to learn to write.’ He has described himself as he was—‘a lean, ugly, idle, unpopular student. . . . Poor soul, I remember how much he was cast down at times, and how life (which had not yet begun) seemed to be already at an end, and hope quite dead, and misfortune and dishonour, like physical presences, dogging him as he went.’ To a youth of such a humour it was a choice piece of good fortune to be admitted to the Speculative—to its atmosphere of good fellowship, its vivid and varied interests, its tradition of honourable labour and success. The influence of the Society 'fell into the good soil of his genius, and afterwards brought forth an hundredfold.'

Even in those days he suffered from the ill-health which followed him through life. The address quoted above was to have been read by its author on the evening of March 25, 1873. The minutes of that date bear that 'Mr. Baxter then read Mr. Stevenson's valedictory address, Mr. Stevenson being unable to attend through illness.' The MS. itself is endorsed with a characteristic note: '. . . I am strictly on my back—have not turned on either side since yesterday morning. Very jolly, however.—R. L. S.'

Stevenson was twice elected a President (1872-73 and 1873-74). He was not overweighted by the business side of his duties, as will be seen from the following extract from a letter written to Mr. Baxter from Dunblane, April 9, 1872 :—

'I don't know what you mean. I know nothing about the Standing Committee of the Spec., did not know that such a body existed, and even if it doth exist, must sadly repudiate all association with such "goodly fellowship." I am a "Rural Voluptuary" at present. That is what is the matter with me. The Spec. may go whistle. As for "C. Baxter, Esq.," who is he? "One Baxter, or Bagster, a secretary," I say to mine acquaintance, "is at present disquieting my leisure with certain illegal, uncharitable, unchristian, and unconstitutional documents called Business Letters. The affair is in the hands of the Police." Do you hear that, you evildoer? Sending business letters is surely a far more hateful and slimy degree of wickedness than sending threatening letters; the man who throws grenades and torpedoes is less malicious; the Devil in red-hot hell rubs his hands with glee as he reckons up the number that go forth spreading pain and anxiety with each delivery of the post.'

He wrote many essays for the Society :—The Influence of the Covenanting Persecution on the Scottish Mind ; Notes on Paradise Lost ; Notes on the Nineteenth Century ; Two Questions on the Relations between Christ's Teaching and Modern Christianity ; and Law and Free Will—Notes on the Duke of Argyll. In set debate he did not shine, if tradition may be trusted, but he spoke regularly and took an eager and often riotous part in private business. He became an extraordinary member on February 11, 1873. He did not, however, discontinue his attendance at the Society. On November 3, 1874, and January 19, 1875, he read two essays on John Knox and his Relations to Women, which were developed into the well-known papers published in Macmillan's Magazine, and reprinted in Familiar Studies of Men and Books.

It need not be told how the memory of the Society remained with him to the end ; how many allusions to it are to be found in his writings ; nor how, in the last and best of his works, the unfinished fragment of Weir of Hermiston, a scene is laid in the hall of the Speculative.

Among Stevenson's contemporaries were Mr. Graham Murray, now Lord Dunedin, Lord Pearson, Mr. Maitland Thomson, most learned of Scots record scholars, and Mr. C. J. Guthrie, now Sheriff of Ross and Sutherland, but in these pages rather to be honoured as the paragon of Secretaries. Stevenson has himself left us fine and sympathetic portraits of two of his fellow-members 'whose war-vessels sank in the sea'—James Walter Ferrier and Robert Glasgow Brown.

Mr. Guthrie's secretaryship (1871-72) marks an epoch in the Society's history. Like many other ancient and learned bodies, the Society was in use to dwell amid material surroundings of time-honoured dirt and shabbiness. Under the strenuous administration of Mr. Guthrie, and his equally zealous successor Mr. Baxter, all this was reformed. The hall was repainted; a new carpet was bought; the old furniture was re-upholstered, and such new furniture as was necessary was supplied; the records were overhauled and put in order; and the fine collection of engraved portraits of old members which the Society now possesses was acquired.

The repainting of the hall brought about renewed trouble with the Senatus Academicus. Professor Wilson, who was then secretary of the Senatus, on discovering what the Society proposed to do, informed the secretary that if the hall was to be painted it should be done by the Senatus, 'as it was their property,' and that he would consider any suggestions that the Society had to make as to the style in which it should be done. The offer of the Senatus was declined. Professor Wilson thereupon intimated that he would not permit the Society to paint the hall, and gave orders to the janitor of the University to refuse admission to any workmen employed by the Society. This step again raised the whole question of the Society's right to the possession of its premises, and it was decided to take a legal opinion as to its position. A memorial was accordingly prepared and submitted to Mr. Robert Horn, then Dean of Faculty. He gave an explicit opinion to the effect that the buildings of the University had been vested in the Senatus in trust for the several uses and purposes to which they had been previously dedicated, and that one of these purposes was the use by the Speculative Society of the rooms which had been specially designed for it, and had been expressly appropriated to its exclusive use in lieu of the original building erected by itself. 'I conceive,' the opinion proceeds, 'it can admit of no doubt that while the nominal title of the whole University buildings is now vested in the Senatus in room of the City, the Senatus holds the rooms in question in trust for the Speculative Society exclusively, just as it does the remainder of the buildings for other public uses.' Fortified by this opinion the Society brought the matter before the Senatus, and, after some correspondence, that body, while making no legal admissions, decided not to maintain the position which had been taken up by its official. The Society was accordingly allowed to paint its rooms without molestation.

These are 'old, unhappy, far-off things.' The Society's relations with the academic authorities are now of the most friendly kind. For many years no attempt has been made to interfere with its right to occupy its own premises and manage its own affairs, or to dispute its independence of the University, which was expressly acknowledged by Sir William Muir, the late Principal, in his address to the Society on becoming an Honorary Member (February 23, 1886). On the other hand, the Society has always shown itself willing to acquiesce in all reasonable regulations for the general management of the University buildings. For many years the University janitor has been ex officio custodian of the Society's rooms. On February 27, 1877, a sum of twenty guineas was voted by the Society to the fund for the erection of the new University buildings.

The minutes of March 6, 1877, contain an entry which will be of interest to many old members. On that date Sergeant William Allport was appointed attendant to the Society. This fine old soldier—he had been in the 16th Lancers and had fought at Aliwal and Sobraon—remained in the Society's employment for fourteen years, and earned the cordial esteem and respect of all the members of his time. On his retirement in 1891 he was presented with a valuable clock as a mark of the Society's regard.

A much needed improvement was effected in 1884 by the introduction into the hall of a modern system of ventilation.

The Society was never more full of vigorous life than in the middle of the eighties. During the period in which the roll of ordinary members included the names of Mr. M'Clure, Mr. R. T. Younger, Mr. Clyde, Count Vladimir Bobrinskoy, Sir Ludovic Grant, Mr. J. A. Smith, and Mr. J. H. Millar, the proceedings did not suffer either from slackness or from monotony. The session of 1884-85 was in many ways a record session. The average attendance of members, ordinary and extraordinary, was 28·2; it never fell below 24. The average number of speeches and criticisms made each evening was 14·7. A record was attained in another direction. On the evening of January 27, 1885, the sitting was prolonged to the hour of twenty-nine minutes to four, the latest meeting recorded in the minutes of the Society. The present writer may be permitted to record an unfaded memory of the resourceful iniquities in private business of Mr. M'Clure, consule Planco, the meteoric brilliance of Count Bobrinskoy, the perfervid Celtic oratory of Mr. Smith, and the critical prelections of Mr. Millar, whose redoubtable shillelagh first acquired its graceful twirl and far-resounding whack by assiduous practice on the heads of his fellow-members.

The record of the Society during the last decade of the nineteenth century is one of peace and prosperity. Perhaps the most notable feature of this period is the fact that the attendance was affected by the absence of a considerable number of ordinary members, who in various capacities were serving at the front during the war in South Africa.

The following is a list of the members who served in the war:—

W. L. Campbell Allan. Captain, 3rd Battalion King's Own Scottish Borderers; station staff officer on lines of communication (graded as a Staff Captain). Queen's medal with two clasps; King's medal with two clasps.

D. G. Baillie. Enlisted as private in C.I.V. Mounted Infantry; promoted Lieutenant in February 1900; served with General Ian Hamilton's Division on the advance to Pretoria. Queen's medal with three clasps.

R. Burns Begg. Joined Cape Colonial Volunteer Forces, October 1899; Lieutenant, October 1899, Captain, June 1901; assisted in raising Kitchener's Horse; acted as galloper to O.C. 6th M.I. Corps; served with Maxim gun detachment Royal Field Artillery attached to Kitchener's Horse; Intelligence Officer to Military Governor, Pretoria; on staff of the Director of Military Intelligence, Army Headquarters, till February 1902, then temporarily as a Captain in the Intelligence Division of the War Office till December 1902. Queen's medal with five clasps; King's medal with two clasps.

Thomas Cadell. Private, C.I.V. Mounted Infantry; gazetted Second Lieutenant King's Own Scottish Borderers, October 13, 1900. Queen's medal with five clasps.

The Earl of Cassillis. Captain, 3rd Battalion Royal Scots Fusiliers; took part in operations in the Transvaal west of Pretoria, July to November 1900, including actions at Frederikstad (October 17 to 25); was a member of the Military Tribunal at Johannesburg, January to March 1901; Intelligence Officer at Alkmaar, June to November 1901; operations in Eastern Transvaal, November-December 1901; on blockhouse line from Wonderfontein to Carolina, December 1901 to April 1902; then at Middelburg till end of war. Queen's medal with three clasps; King's medal with two clasps.

J. B. Craik. Private, 6th (Scottish) Battalion Imperial

Yeomanry; served chiefly in South-west Transvaal. Queen's medal with four clasps.

J. C. Stormonth Darling. Second Lieutenant, Scottish Rifles; Railway Staff Officer, operations in the Transvaal east of Pretoria, November 1900; operations in the Transvaal, November 1900 to June 1901, and November 1901 to April 1902; in Orange River Colony, June to September 1901, and November 1901; on the Zululand frontier of Natal in September and October 1901. Mentioned in despatches (London Gazette, January 17, 1902) as follows: 'Second Lieutenant J. C. Stormonth Darling in action on September 17, 1901 (Blood River Poort), commanded escort to guns and continued firing himself and encouraging his men till overpowered and his rifle snatched from his hand.' Queen's medal with three clasps; King's medal with two clasps.

John Gilmour. Major, Fife and Forfar Imperial Yeomanry; Hon. Captain in the Army; served with I.Y. Twice mentioned in despatches (London Gazette, September 10, 1901, and July 29, 1902). Queen's medal with three clasps.

J. L. Greig. Captain, 3rd Battalion King's Own Scottish Borderers (retired as Hon. Major, 1902); served in Cape Colony. Queen's medal with clasp.

J. G. Jameson. Private, 6th Battalion I.Y.; served with General Hunter's column. Queen's medal with two clasps.

A. H. M. Jamieson. Captain, West of Scotland Royal Garrison Artillery Militia; Hon. Lieutenant in the Army; commanded Machine Gun Section attached to 6th Battalion I.Y. Queen's medal with three clasps.

David Johnston. Private, 6th Battalion I.Y. Queen's medal with four clasps.

J. G. H. M'Intosh. Private, 6th Battalion I.Y. Queen's medal with four clasps.

I. B. C. Neilson. Lance-Corporal, Volunteer Service

Company, 1st Battalion The Royal Scots; was at battle of Belfast, Eastern Transvaal, August 27 and 28, 1900. Queen's medal with four clasps.

The Hon. Hugh Robertson. Second Lieutenant, 14th Hussars; served in South Africa, 1899-1900. Died February 1, 1901, in consequence of an accident in South Africa.

J. H. Scott. Corporal, 6th Battalion I.Y. Queen's medal with two clasps.

J. A. Shiell. Private, 1st Volunteer Company, 1st Oxfordshire Light Infantry. Queen's medal with four clasps.

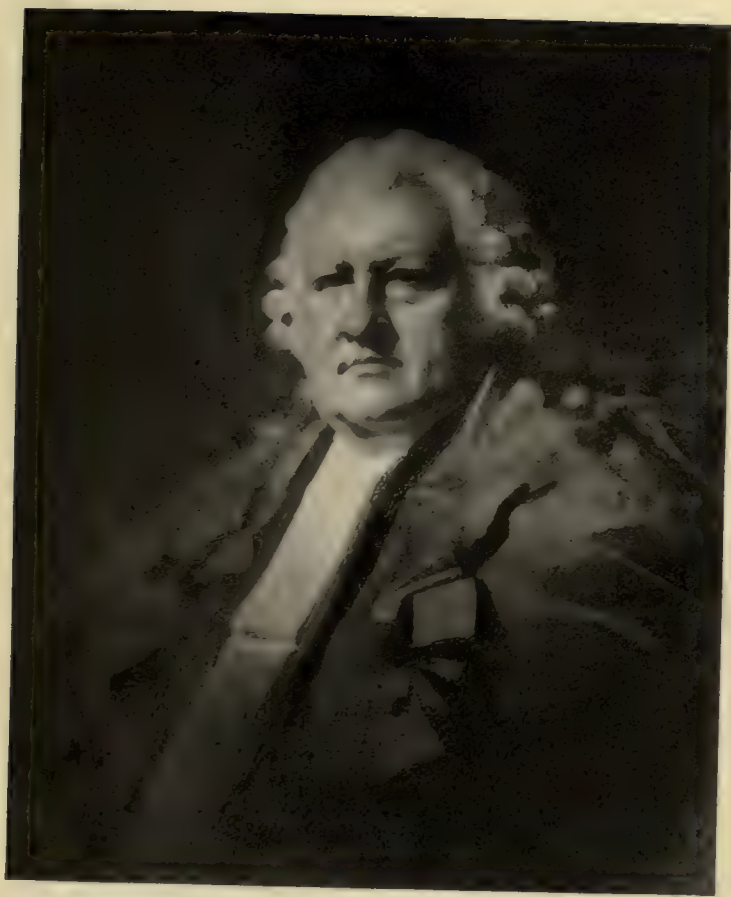

C. E. Stewart. Civil engineer; served with the British forces, 1901.

W. Burton Stewart. Major, Lothians and Berwickshire I.Y.; Hon. Lieutenant in the Army; served as Lieutenant with 20th Company I.Y. Queen's medal with three clasps.

H. B. Towse. Captain, 2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys); served as Lieutenant, afterwards Captain, 6th Battalion I.Y.; with General Hunter's Western Force during general advance, afterwards with Generals Barton and Babington in Western Transvaal, Colonel Pilcher in Orange River Colony, and General Plumer in South-east Transvaal. Received direct commission as Captain in the Army June 14, 1902. Mentioned in despatches (London Gazette, August 20, 1901) 'for plucky action in rescuing a wounded man' at Spitzkop on February 11, 1901. Queen's medal with three clasps; King's medal with two clasps.

D. A. Wauchope. Major, Lothians and Berwickshire I.Y.; Hon. Lieutenant in the Army; served as Lieutenant with 6th Battalion I.Y. Mentioned in despatches (London Gazette, September 10, 1901). D.S.O. Queen's medal with three clasps.

CHAPTER IV

THE SOCIETY AS IT IS

NOTHING is more notable in the long history of the Society than the fact that it has changed so little. Its objects and most of its characteristics remain the same as they were in the days of the founders. Hugo Arnot's description of it in his History of Edinburgh, published in 1779, might be applied to the Society of to-day with scarcely an alteration.

Its fundamental features have always been the strict limitation of membership and the entire exclusion of strangers from its proceedings.

The number of ordinary residing members is limited to thirty. Application for admission is made by a petition, which must be attested by two members. These petitions are voted on by ballot, one black ball in four being sufficient to exclude. The annual subscription payable by an ordinary member is two guineas.

A member may, after three years' attendance, and the punctual performance of the duties allotted to him, petition for the privileges of extraordinary membership. Such petitions are disposed of at the meeting subsequent to their presentation, and may be granted by the vote of a bare majority. An extraordinary member retains all the rights of membership, but is relieved from all compulsory duties and attendance, and from payment of the annual subscription. The institution of extraordinary membership has worked admirably, and has proved a great source of strength to the Society. It has kept senior members in touch with the Society, often for many years, and, as has been seen, it provides a formidable reserve force which can be called out on occasion.

The Society may also confer the privilege of honorary membership. It has for many years been the custom to offer honorary membership to the Principal of the University for the time being. With this exception it is almost never conferred, except upon those who have been ordinary members and have either attained to very remarkable eminence or have rendered exceptional services to the Society.

Members of the Dublin College Historical Society and the Union Society of London are admitted as members, but without the right of taking any share in private business. The origin and subsequent discontinuance of this arrangement with regard to the former Society have already been described; it was revived in 1863. In the case of the Union Society the privilege dates from 1871.

A majority of two-thirds may expel any member.

The office-bearers of the Society are five presidents, a secretary, and a librarian, who are all annually elected. The presidents officiate in rotation. The duty of the President is to preserve order in the Society and to enforce the laws. He has somewhat formidable powers of fining; any possible abuse of his authority is kept in check by the Society's power to pass a vote of censure on his conduct. He appoints all committees judged necessary by the Society. He has no vote, except in cases of equality or of a vote by ballot. If he should wish to take part in debate he must leave the chair.

The Secretary has general charge of the business of the Society, and is responsible for the keeping of its records. He has the sole management of the funds, and is vested with autocratic powers in the allocation of duties to ordinary members. He is ex officio a member and convener of all committees.

The Librarian has entire charge of the library and its contents and of the library funds. He is assisted by a committee of three ordinary members, who are annually appointed. The Secretary and Librarian are assisted in their duties by a paid clerk.

On the fourth last meeting of each session a committee is appointed to report on the Secretary's and Librarian's books. At the last meeting in January a committee of seven members is appointed to prepare a draft case-book containing the debates for the following session. The case-book is revised and finally adjusted at the second last meeting of the session, and is printed and issued to members.

The office-bearers constitute a standing committee for attending to the Society's interests on all necessary matters not otherwise provided for.

The ordinary meetings are held every Tuesday evening during the winter session of the University. The Society meets at eight o'clock, and is constituted by the president of the evening. Seven members form a quorum; if a member leaves the Society when only a quorum is present he is liable to a fine. As soon as the Society is constituted the first roll is called. Any ordinary member failing to answer to his name is fined two shillings. The minutes of the previous meeting are read and adjusted. The essay for the evening is then read and criticised, and the essay for next night intimated. The duty of reading an essay is allotted to members in rotation. Each essayist has to give a week's notice of his subject.

The list of members whose payments to the Society are in arrears and the list of members failing to return books to the library are then read, and resignations, petitions for extraordinary and non-residing privileges, and for admission, are read and disposed of. The Society then adjourns for a short interval, during which tea and coffee are served in the lobby, an institution which dates from the reign of Mr. Guthrie in 1872.

After the adjournment the Society is re-constituted and the second roll called. Then follows the debate.

The debates are taken from the printed case-books. In each case-book a certain number of debates are left blank; these are generally filled up with questions of the day. The debate is opened by two ordinary members selected by the Secretary. The senior member has the choice of the view he wishes to support. This rule, which may impose upon a member the duty of maintaining a view at variance with his personal opinion, has existed in substance for nearly a century. When first introduced it met with strong opposition. On January 6, 1807, certain members lodged reasons of dissent against the Society's decision in the matter. Here are some of the reasons:—

‘That this law, by encouraging rather the Hudibrastic talent—

“On either side to hold dispute, Confute, change hands, and still confute,” than that of exhibiting a train of sound arguments, and a lucid declaration of sincere sentiments, tends to perpetuate among the members of this Society, as substitutes for this air of sincerity, those figures of rhetoric already so profusely employed by Public Speakers, viz. exaggerated epithets, unqualified assertion on doubtful points, sophistical reasoning and foggy declamation, to the prevalence of which the contempt of oratory professed by many profound philosophers, and the abstinence from it of so many more, seem chiefly to be attributable; and which, thus tending to debar the philosopher from eloquence, and the public speaker from wisdom, appear by the device of the Society peculiarly obnoxious to its original spirit. . . . It is not the adoption of particular arguments on the weaker side of the debate, but the unassumed language of the head and heart, the veræ voces ab imo pectore, which can produce a sincere conviction in others, the attainment of Truth, not the promotion of unprofitable declamation, being the desirable object.'

The subject is discussed in the History of 1845, and the views expressed by its authors are those on which the Society has consistently acted. 'The truth indeed is,' they say with justice, 'that there is some foppery of virtue, even in the argument by which the objection is supported. Nothing is worse than hypocrisy; and therefore, on occasions when sincerity is relied on, there ought to be sincerity. But when it is known and avowed, the disputants are merely stating views, and this for mental exercise, the absence of sincerity is no more a reproach, than it is to the fencer, who, instead of running his adversary through with a real sword, only attests his dexterity by a touch of the foil.'

The debate is closed by a division. In a few rare cases the division lists have, by a special resolution of the Society, been preserved, but this has not been done for many years.

The question for next night's debate is then intimated, and the Society then proceeds to consider appeals, reports, motions and other private business. 'Private business' has always bulked largely in the proceedings. It includes protests against decisions of the Society, impeachments of the conduct of officials, and personal matters of all kinds. Needless to say it can be made very interesting. Sometimes it can be made very dull. Away back in the seven-teen-sixties Hugo Arnot was a great artist in business of this kind, and he has never lacked zealous successors. Not the least valuable part of the training which the Society affords is the abundant opportunity of practice in conducting controversial business with fairness, good humour, and rigid adherence to the rules of the game. Many a contentious Scotch bill has been piloted through Committee by methods first practised in the private business of the Speculative.

Indeed the Society is an excellent school of affairs. It has always had plenty of members who, like Sir Walter Scott, have had the advantage of a 'chamber education.' Every member has ample opportunity of learning how to frame a resolution, how to draft a minute, how to keep a cash account, how to arrange the agenda of a meeting—all useful adjuncts to the accomplishments of 'literary composition and public speaking.'

At the close of private business the third roll is called, and the Society is then adjourned. Absence from the second or third roll infers a fine of a shilling. In former times, as has been seen, the Society occasionally prolonged its sittings to unholy hours. Of late years it has generally adjourned about midnight.

An extraordinary meeting may at any time be held by appointment of the Society, or may be called by the Secretary on written requisition by ten members.

Failure to perform any duty, whether official or otherwise, is punished by fines. In the case of failure to read an essay when appointed, the fine is a guinea; in that of failure to open a debate, half a guinea. No member is accepted as substitute for another in the discharge of any duty unless he produces a written mandate.

The library was instituted in 1784; it now contains about 3000 volumes. It was thoroughly overhauled and put in order in 1887 by Mr. Clyde, then librarian. Manuscript catalogues have been compiled from time to time. A complete catalogue was prepared by the Hon. William Watson (librarian, 1897-98), which was printed and issued to members in 1903. Members are allowed to borrow six volumes at a time, on entering their names in a receipt-book which lies on the library table. The annual additions average from fifteen to twenty volumes. While no strict rule of exclusion has ever been adopted, the Society has pursued the policy that the library should consist chiefly of works relating to politics and public life. It now contains a very valuable collection of Parliamentary proceedings, state trials, and works of modern history, biography, economics, philosophy, and constitutional law. Fiction and belles lettres are entirely excluded, except in the case of works by members of the Society, a notable exception, including as it does Guy Mannering and Redgauntlet, not to mention Prince Otto and Treasure Island.

In 1797 the following resolution was entered in the minutes: 'That members who engage in any literary pursuit should be recommended to present their works to the Library, an acquisition which will prove doubly acceptable to the Society, as a testimony of their regard, and as a pleasing memorial of their success in those pursuits to which this Institution may have originally contributed.' It is a pity that the recommendation has not been more carefully observed. If it had been so, in the words of Lord Cockburn, in writing to the Secretary in 1852 with a copy of his Life of Jeffrey, 'no similar institution in the Empire would have possessed a more splendid trophy of the good it had done and the gratitude it had earned.'

A glass case in the library contains a number of interesting autographs of distinguished members of the Society, including the cash-book and the minute-book kept by Sir Walter Scott.

The Society now possess a very fine collection of portraits of its members. These include oil paintings of Francis Horner by Raeburn, of Sir Walter Scott by Watson Gordon, of Lord Brougham by Sir Daniel MacNee; busts of Horner and Jeffrey; old caricatures by Kay and Crombie, in which members are represented; and some eighty engravings, calotypes, and photographs, including portraits of Creech, Dugald Stewart, Mackintosh, Cockburn, John Clerk of Eldin, Lansdowne, Russell, Lockhart, Wilson, Sir William Hamilton, and R. L. Stevenson.

The compilers of the old History concluded their labours with a solemn admonition to their successors concerning their duties to the Society and to posterity. It was 'the tune of the time'; Edinburgh in the forties was a serious place, and given to sermons. Here it may suffice to repeat what Cockburn wrote of the Speculative fifty-two years ago: 'It still flourishes, and can never expire now, except by the unworthiness of the youths in whose day it shall sink.' Semper honos nomenque tuum laudesque manebunt!

the two sets of measurements, the results are as follows:—
 The first set of measurements, the results of which are given in Table I, show that the rate of reaction is proportional to the concentration of the reactants, and that the reaction is of the second order.

The second set of measurements, the results of which are given in Table II, show that the rate of reaction is proportional to the concentration of the reactants, and that the reaction is of the second order.

The third set of measurements, the results of which are given in Table III, show that the rate of reaction is proportional to the concentration of the reactants, and that the reaction is of the second order.

The fourth set of measurements, the results of which are given in Table IV, show that the rate of reaction is proportional to the concentration of the reactants, and that the reaction is of the second order. The results of these measurements are in good agreement with those of the other three sets of measurements, and confirm the conclusion that the reaction is of the second order. The rate of reaction is proportional to the concentration of the reactants, and the reaction is of the second order.

The fifth set of measurements, the results of which are given in Table V, show that the rate of reaction is proportional to the concentration of the reactants, and that the reaction is of the second order. The results of these measurements are in good agreement with those of the other four sets of measurements, and confirm the conclusion that the reaction is of the second order.

DISCUSSION

The results of the five sets of measurements show that the rate of reaction is proportional to the concentration of the reactants, and that the reaction is of the second order. This is in good agreement with the theoretical prediction, and confirms the conclusion that the reaction is of the second order.
